How do our early years programs support children's learning and development?

Learning happens through play!

We model enthusiasm for play and use language that values play. Through play, children build relationships which can spark engagement that promotes learning and growth. We make available, materials, resources and experiences that will encourage children to explore, wonder, question, experiment, and discover new ideas, skills and learning. We think that this "cycle of curiosity" impacts engagement. We have noticed that children's curiosity can affect how they choose to engage in play. We also know that attitudes of adults can affect children's engagement.

Let's look at three levels of engagement children use in their play:

1. Participative Engagement. Children are engaged in an experience because of an imposed requirement of an adult. What do you notice when adults are leading and directing the play of children?
2. Affective Engagement. The children participate in an experience for pure enjoyment. What brings your child joy when he/she plays? Why do you think that is?
3. Cognitive Engagement. Children are motivated from within, and have a desire to explore an interest either on their own or with a peer. How might time and space play a role in how deeply children explore their interests?

Engagement is needed for children to learn, grow and flourish.
Their natural curiosity helps them be fully engaged!
